By noon he was tired and stopped at an Oasis to rest and eat. He idled his time throwing stones around him.

Suddenly, he heard a roar and saw a fierce-looking genie coming towards him with a silver sword.

‘You killed my son, I will kill you.’

‘I didn’t kill your son,’ cried the merchant.

‘The stones you threw killed him.’

‘I am sorry, please spare me and give me a last wish,’ said the merchant. ‘What is it?’ asked the genie.

'Let me go home and settle all my debts and see to my family's future. I will be back here exactly a year later at this same spot'.

'If you are not here, you will die a painful death,' said the genie.

A year passed and the merchant kept his promise. He went back to the same place and waited. The genie came and so did four old men with their camels and horses on their way to the city.
