The Squirrel and the Baby Elephant

A squirrel and a mountain elephant were very good friends. They would play together whenever it was bright and sunny. He liked playing Hide and Seek with the squirrel in the trees. When it rained, the squirrel preferred to stay at home because he did not like getting his fur wet.

The elephant's father was unhappy and did not like his son playing with a tiny creature when he should be playing with big elephants. He was also angry because the elephant left his homework to play.

The baby elephant was afraid of his father. But, he did not want to make him unhappy. Since he was bigger than the squirrel, he always got caught. He didn't mind. It was fun.

Once, while they were playing, they heard the father elephant approaching. They could hear his angry footsteps—thump, thump, thump.

The poor baby cried and hid behind a tree. But, he could be seen as he was much bigger than the tree.

When the father saw this he cried out, 'Come home and finish your work.' The squirrel didn't know that the baby elephant had left his work to play.

He ran up to the father elephant's ear and whispered something.

The father said, 'Alright. Your friend squirrel will not play with you if you leave your homework and play. From today, he will play with you only if you finish your work.'

The baby elephant went home and finished his work. The father thanked the squirrel for being a good friend who helped the baby elephant to do the right thing.
